Dear Friends,

Like you, we believe that helping women and girls is a smart investment. Chicago Foundation for Women believes that expanding economic security, enhancing access to health services and information, and ensuring freedom from violence will give women and girls the opportunity to achieve their full potential.

We believe that when women and girls are secure, whole communities are made better.

We believe that Chicago Foundation for Women is a catalyst for change, with deep roots in the community.

And, we believe in collaboration. That’s why in 2012, Chicago Foundation for Women and the former Eleanor Foundation created a strategic alliance to bring greater resources to support economic well-being for women and girls.

Through grants, advocacy, leadership development, education and capacity building, we improve the lives of women and girls.

We believe that as long as we stick together, collective impact is possible. Thank you for joining us to create strong, healthy and secure communities for Chicago’s women and girls.

Giovanna Smith was standing in front of the public aid office when her phone rang. In just a few minutes, her life would change forever. Giovanna would learn she had landed a full-time job with the Howard Area Community Center—a job that included a salary, health benefits and on-site daycare for her two daughters, Zanaya, 2 and Trinitee, 9 months old.

The timing was perfect. Giovanna had been working two part-time jobs to make ends meet. But, after being laid off from her job at a café and being unable to keep the second job because of travel and daycare costs, Giovanna was unemployed.

To help her get off unemployment, Giovanna was referred to the WILL (Women Invested in Learning and Livelihoods) program at Youth Job Center. A grantee of the Eleanor Network at CFW, the 18-month WILL program helps women ages 18-25 find, secure, and maintain career jobs.

Giovanna attended workshops on financial literacy, education and career advancement. The program even had a savings match incentive to help her reach her long-term financial goals. Also, Giovanna had the opportunity to connect with supportive services and professional mentoring. Like all of CFW’s grantees, the WILL program is specifically designed to identify the unique challenges faced by women and girls and provide practical solutions.

The WILL program is one of the 8 workforce development programs in the Eleanor Network at CFW. Launched in 2012 following CFW’s strategic alliance with the former Eleanor Foundation, the Eleanor Network at CFW expands economic security across the lifespan of a woman. The grantmaking model within the Network combines intensive training and comprehensive support services to ensure that women have clear pathways for career advancement.

Giovanna is now a family support worker who travels to the homes of first-time mothers. She provides prenatal advice, child development information, and financial literacy materials. Many of the mothers naturally connect to Giovanna because she understands the barriers that low-income women and their children face.

Through WILL, to date, she has saved over $4,000 and dreams of buying a home and car. Once her girls are older, Giovanna plans to attend college and study early childhood education. She sees it as her calling, one she would not have found if not for CFW’s support of Youth Job Center.
Myrla Baldonado migrated from the Philippines to the United States looking for better job opportunities. Instead, Myrla experienced discrimination and abuse.

Her first job was as a certified nurse’s assistant and caregiver to seniors. In that role, Myrla was physically and mentally abused by her patient’s son and denied overtime pay. When she reported the abuse and wage theft to her employer, they told her she was at fault for making the man upset.

Myrla eventually left that job and was hired by Chicago Foundation for Women grantee, Latino Union of Chicago.

Today, Myrla tirelessly advocates for domestic worker rights to ensure domestic workers have a better work environment than she had. She demands benefits like minimum wage and overtime pay. Her current focus is fighting to pass a law to mandate meal breaks, paid sick leave, payment for uninterrupted work, and paid days off for domestic workers.

In early 2013, Myrla jumped at the chance to join CFW’s Advocacy Academy. Launched in 2012, the Academy trains 20 staff members of CFW’s grantee organizations each year. The Academy gives participants the essential skills required to effectively engage in the public policy debate. Workshops in the Academy include “State and Local Budgeting,” “Messaging,” “Social Media,” and “Coalition Building.”

Chicago Foundation for Women is dedicated to building effective, smart and resilient nonprofit leaders. We provide not only grants to community organizations, but we also invest in the professional and personal development of their most promising leaders. And, these investments pay off.

The White House recently awarded Myrla with the Asian American Pacific Islander (AAPI) “Champion of Change” Award. She received the award with 14 other AAPI women who are working to create a more equal, safe, and prosperous future for their communities and their country.

“I came to America with a dream of living a happy and purposeful life,” said Myrla. “CFW’s Advocacy Academy has given me the confidence I need to live out that dream and help other women live it, too.”
NURTURE THE POTENTIAL

WOMAN OF COLOR LEADER, HUMAN RIGHTS ACTIVIST, CIVIC LEADER, ORGANIZER, GRANTEE + ALLY

Kim Hunt is a participant of the Women of Color Collaborative. Kim is the executive director of Affinity Community Services, a CFW grantee.
The Woman of Color Collaborative Project, The Advocacy Academy, Board Member Boot Camp, and "Core Concepts."

Kim Hunt is one of the 18 women who participated in the Project’s pilot year. She credits the initiative as being one of the "best professional development programs" she’s ever participated in because the Project gives a voice and a space to a group that is often not at the table.

As a child, Kim first learned about the effects of excluding key voices. In her Kansas City neighborhood, Kim watched as homes were demolished to make room for a highway. Families were left without a community. The blithe disregard of the urban communities impacted Kim all throughout her childhood. It should come as no surprise that Kim then pursued a career in urban planning after college. Her work was dedicated to uniting decision makers and community officials in a meaningful way. In her current role as the executive director of Affinity Community Services, Kim is making sure Chicago’s black lesbian and bisexual women’s community have their voices heard.

Through the Women of Color Collaborative Project, Kim has learned about her personal leadership style. The Project helped Kim realize that leadership is about being clear in direction and allowing her team to be more reflective. Because of the Women of Color Collaborative Project, Kim says her team dynamic is more collaborative in creating the strategy behind Affinity’s work.

Kim also said the Women of Color Collaborative Project has inspired her to prioritize Affinity's focus on emerging leaders and their development process.

A major component of the Project is building a pipeline of leadership and mentorship for women of color leaders. Kim is making sure that Affinity’s young leadership programs develop both the practical and personal skills of the participants.

Participants in the Project are also planning, developing and discussing alternative models of organizing. They are being challenged to abandon silos and work together across issue areas of women’s rights, labor rights, civil rights, LGBTQ rights, and immigrant rights. Through the Women of Color Capacity Building Project, CFW is a pioneer in teaching women how to be civic leaders and encouraging women, like Kim, to create and transform each of these movements from the inside.

Doris Conant leads by example. During the Civil Rights Movement, Doris led a community organizing effort to address the needs of mothers at the former Jane Addams Homes, a housing project on Chicago’s West Side. Doris went door-to-door asking the mothers about what they wanted for their children. The moms wanted expanded opportunities for their kids like preschools, a library and an after-school program for girls.

The neighborhood had a dedicated facility and various after-school activities for boys, but nothing for girls. Doris helped raise money to bring girl’s programs to the West Side community. She also stood in solidarity with the mothers and picketed the mobile library that appeared for only a few hours every two weeks in the neighborhood. The women also took their message directly to the Chicago Public Library Board, where they demanded a permanent neighborhood library.

Wanting to continue her work standing with, and standing for, women, Doris Conant first became involved with Chicago Foundation for Women when CFW was still a new and budding organization. Doris eventually joined CFW’s board of directors.

Since that time, Doris has remained an active leader in the women’s rights community. In 2012, she made a truly momentous gift of $1 million dollars to launch the Doris & Howard Conant Fund for Women’s Rights at Chicago Foundation for Women. Thanks to the Doris & Howard Conant Fund, CFW has already awarded six grants, including one of CFW’s first multi-year grants, to innovative advocacy organizations.

Like so many of CFW’s donors, Doris views CFW as a trusted, knowledgeable partner. Doris counts on CFW to be a resource and to ensure her gift is carefully invested in community groups that hold the greatest promise to impact the issues that are most important to her.

Most of all, Doris wants to lead by example and inspire her daughters, grand-daughters and other female philanthropists.

“I made this gift hoping it might inspire other women,” said Doris. “Women need to be bold in their philanthropy. You might not think you can do this, but you can.”
